

This is a report of my (Assistant Professor Dr. Siriparn Sriwanyong) academic visit to the University of Vienna from 24th November to 7th December, 2013, as part of the joint academic research of CLASDISA project between the University of Vienna and Srinakharinwirot University. The purpose of this visit is to analyse data quantitatively and qualitatively with Miss Michelle Proyer, field research assistant in Thailand. The activities are the followings:

1. Analyse data in terms of the relationship between disabilities and religion of children with disabilities in Thailand
2. Analyse data in terms of the barriers and facilitators related to children with disabilities in Thailand
3. Discuss strategies in disseminating research findings in scientific journals
4. Present and discuss preliminary findings in seminars with faculty and graduate students
5. Lead field trip with graduate students to visit a Thai temple to enhance the understanding of the students in research activities

6. Visit an Inclusive School in Vienna to better understand the educational management for students with disabilities in Austria.
